Oil Price Outlook Special
Most frequently cited negative factors for downside of forecast are return of the unconventional (shale and ethanol) oil in the US as well as recovering production in Libya and Nigeria as well as the end of the driving season. While supporting factors for the oil price is OPEC cut and stricter compliance with OPEC production quotas as well as economic growth in the US.

MidLincoln Oil Price Outlook Special
At risk event will be within its previous trend. At the point our village falls will be more comfortable with trend levels. But we don't believe it will get there.

Sharp Rise In OVX Volatility
In our view dropping oil price is a nice cold shower for the markets - reminded of substitution, non-OPEC and unconventional supply, as well as longer term factors that weigh down on oil price such as impact of tighter ecological standards and rise in electric vehicles production and usage. But with the future curve still in backwardation markets are still in bullish mode. For any village lower oil prices could result in cheaper gas and fuel. However in some countries like Russia gasoline prices could be higher. But with the Russian ruble is vulnerable to oil price declines, yet the local prices moved higher much as 30% as oil price did. The rise in domestic gas prices in the Russian vilseae can not be explained by currency moves. Most likely it is has inflationary origin or the prices had been managed to be fixed at lower levels and narrower margin of integrated oil companies have exhausted the ability of Russian domestic oil producers to keep subsidizing gas prices for Russian retail.
